

Before getting out of the car, Lola puts a honey-lemon drop in her mouth to help to control her cough. She crosses her fingers in hopes that the doctor will not prescribe something with a horrible taste. They enter the clinic and wait for their turn to be called back.

This time they are seen by Dr. Carmen, a very beautiful young woman. She has long red hair and always has a smile on her face. Lola likes Dr. Carmen. After examining Lola, the doctor prescribes a reddish cough syrup. The smell is pungent and unpleasant. The texture is so slimy that it looks like jelly. Lola doesn't want to take it, and she starts crying. Dr. Carmen doesn't get mad. She explains that it is to help Lola, that there is no need to cry, and that in a few days, she will feel much better and the cough will disappear.

After thanking her, we return home. I look at the syrup bottle. I have to take it three times a day, with my meals. When I know it's time to take it, my stomach suddenly tightens, and although I make thousands of excuses, my father forces me to take it.

Despite its disgusting taste, I end up obeying Dad, and as if by magic, the cough ends up disappearing. I only needed three days of suffering, and finally, everything was better. Now that I am cured, I will never take that horrible syrup again. Yuck!!!
