

LOLA AND THE STICKERS

Who as a child has never had stickers? If you were good, the teacher would give you one so you could stick it where you liked the most. If you ate all the food, your mom would give it to you so you could stick it on your hand. If you collected all your toys, your dad would give you a full-color sticker to decorate your mirror. And so a sum and follows of situations in which they gave you stickers.

My friend Lola did not like stickers. She was afraid that if she stuck one on her hand, it would never come off. It was as if that insignificant piece of paper was going to be permanently stuck on her like a tattoo. Lola's fear was so intense that whenever someone tried to reward by giving her a sticker, she would cry uncontrollably.

Her teacher was quite concerned about Lola's strong reaction. She decided that she had to try to find a solution to Lola's problem. One day after recess, she called Lola over to have a conversation about what made Lola cry whenever someone offered her a sticker.
