

Perhaps the best known of the Himalayas is Mount Everest, the highest mountain above sea level on the planet. Every year, hundreds of mountaineers dare to climb to the top of that mountain.

Several well-known rivers begin in the Himalayas, such as the Ganges River of India, a place where different sacred rituals are performed. Also, the Himalayas have hundreds of lakes, such as Lake Tsongo in Sikkim and several glaciers, like the Siachen Glacier. Some lakes are created from the melting of glaciers.

The Himalayas is a place with varied fauna; one that stands out is the snow leopard, a species in danger of extinction, and wild goats or mountain goats.

The flora is also varied, depending on the altitude and the climate present in each mountain, you can find deciduous forests or perennial forests in different areas of the Himalayas. The deciduous forests lose their leaves in autumn, and the perennial forests keep their leaves.

For many people, the Himalayas are the most beautiful and magnificent natural place on the planet. For others, climbing the Himalayas is their life's dream. Unfortunately, few can make it. But what is true is that the greatness and majesty of the Himalayas are unique. Would you like to go to know the Himalayas?

