One night a little firefly came by my backyard. He told me he always flies right here when daylight ends. He didn't know why he couldn't fly high enough into the sky to touch the moon. He cried as he told me how much the light of the moon filled him with delight. When he spied the stars twinkling right by the moon, he had tried with all his might to make the flight. He said with a sigh, "I couldn't make it by myself." I told the little firefly that I lie in the grass every night just to spy his light shining slightly more brightly in the dark. He smiled.
